Richards1: Dr. Mathews speaks, in his concluding paragraph, of the saving of the rarer elements made practicable by using the electric furnace. A very good illustration of this is seen in making armor plate. About 50 percent of the steel cast from the furnace gets into the finished armor plate and about 50 percent is scrap, which has to go back to the furnace to be remelted. In this remelting all the chromium in the metal is lost; and this is not only a loss of chromium, but it makes a slag that is very pasty, infusible and hard to handle, so that you have difficulty with the slag because of its content of chromium oxide. If the armor-plate scrap were remelted in electric furnaces, the whole of the chromium would be saved and the metallurgical difficulties with the slag would be obviated....
