LCS integrates with Office, Exchange Server, and Active Directory, making it a one-stop shop for a Microsoft-driven business that needs a suite of communications features. LCS can also tie in with various audio and video systems, provide secure instant messaging facilities, and allows users to create on-demand teleconferences all using SIP and VoIP technology. Our book, written by a freelance LCS expert and a Microsoft product manager on the LCS team, provides straight-forward technical information that only those with detailed experience in the problems customers have experienced in deploying and managing Live Communications Server can provide. Its practical, guided, and comprehensive. - Live Communications Server is a recent release in Microsofts core server suite that enables unified communications across an office through a variety of devices, including phones, web conferences, and the Internet.
