Army War College, 1997 OCLC Number: (OCoLC)44375317 Subject: National security -- Baltic States. Excerpt: . . . endanger its own security. These policies are reintegrating the CIS, creating an exclusive Russian sphere there, demanding a veto over NATOs and Central and Eastern Europes activity, and barring Central and Eastern 31 Europes military modernization. Russia seeks equality with the United States, its own unchallenged sphere in the CIS, and the demilitarization of Central and Eastern Europe so that the great powers alone could once again revise their status. Russia has reverted to old thinking about world politics and Europe, such as correlations of forces, especially military forces, zero-sum games, and worst case threat scenarios. Not surprisingly, Russian elites believe that for Russia t o be Russia it must have exclusive and uncontested dominance over the CIS and an accompanying sphere of influence over the Baltic states. Any Western influence in the CIS and Baltic immediately threatens Russian vital interests even as Russia demands a veto and voice in Western activities. Yeltsins former senior foreign policy advisor, Dmitri Ryurikov, observed that it was strange, unjust (or unfair) and wrong for NATO not to grant Russia such a veto and that refusal to give Russia this right actually deprives it of the possibility of taking part 32 in settling European security problems. In other words, without an empire and that veto, Russia is nothing in Europe, and everyone threatens it. But while the West must not intervene in its sphere of influence, Russia must have security rights or privileges unequal to every other state, 33 i. e. , a veto over NATO and its policies. To be...
